Food Safety Supervisor Requirements

Why is a Food Safety Supervisor important?

Food laws in NSW require certain food businesses in the hospitality and retail food service sector to appoint at least one trained Food Safety Supervisor (FSS).

The aim of an FSS is to prevent individuals from becoming ill from food poisoning as a result of incorrect handling and preparation of food.

Appointing an FSS gives food businesses a better level of onsite protection for food safety, and gives consumers peace-of-mind when dining out or buying food in NSW.

Who Needs a Food Safety Supervisor?

The FSS requirements apply to businesses that process or sell food at the retail level e.g. food that is:-

- Ready-to-eat,
- Potentially hazardous (requires temperature control), and
- Not sold and served in the supplier's original packaging.

These businesses include:-

- Restaurants
- Cafés
- Takeaway shops
- Caterers (e.g. process and serve food at one fixed location)
- Mobile caterers (e.g. process and transport food to more than one location)
- Bakeries
- Pubs, clubs and hotels
- Temporary premises (e.g. food market stalls)
- Mobile food vendors (e.g. process and sell food from a van)
- Supermarket hot food sales (e.g. hot chicken)

Who Does Not Need a Food Safety Certificate?

The FSS requirement does not apply to businesses licensed by the NSW Food Authority. Nor does it apply to:-

- Coffee vendors that only heat milk
- Not-for-profit community and charitable causes
- School canteens (primary or secondary)
- Boarding schools
- Children's service (childcare centres)
- Out of school hours care services
- Correctional centres
- Supermarkets (if heated food is not sold)
- Food business premises that only do one or more of the following activities only:-
 - Slice fermented meats or smallgoods, or both.
 - Slice or portion cheese, or both.
 - Process raw seafood.
 - Slice or portion fruit or vegetables, or both.
